as the defeat at Mahāim was due mainly to factional cleavages, troops consisting only of one party, that of the New-comers, were to be sent to the northern front under the Maliku't-tujjār. He was successful, capture'd Burhānpūr and defeated Naṣīr Khān at the battle of Lāling.¹⁵

The southern frontier was practically settled on the line of the Tungābhadra though the Doab between that river and the river Krishnā was a constant bone of contention between the Bahmanīs and Vijayanagar.¹⁶ The matter and the manner of the enlistment of the Muslims in the Vijayanagar army is an interesting episode and it would be well to quote the words of the translator of the Ferishtā with regard to it:

“About this time Dew Ray of Beejanuggur summoned a council of his nobility and principal bramins; observing to them, that as his country (the Carnatic), in extent, population, and revenue, far exceeded that of the house of Bahmuny, and also as his army was more numerous, he requested them to point out the cause of the success of the Mahomedans, and of his having been reduced to pay them tribute. Some said, that the Almighty had
